EFFORTS TO REDUCE RACIAL, ETHNIC, AND ECONOMIC ISOLATION

Below is the description submitted by this school of how it provides educational opportunities for its students to interact with students and teachers from diverse racial, ethnic, and economic backgrounds.

Greenwich is characterized by socioeconomic and demographic diversity. While per capita income is among the highest in Connecticut, nine percent of the children enrolled in public school qualify for free or reduced price meals. Eighteen percent of the school population comes from homes where English is not the dominant language and seven percent of students are not fluent in English. Minority students total twenty five percent of the school population. Given this diversity, efforts to reduce racial, ethnic and economic isolation have focused primarily on bridging the gaps within the town rather than developing relationships with other communities.

The primary challenge to reducing economic, ethnic and racial isolation within the Town of Greenwich is geographic. While sufficient building capacity exists to accommodate enrollment, a long-standing tradition of neighborhood elementary schools and recent patterns of enrollment growth have contributed to racial imbalance in some schools and overcrowding in others. In the late 1990's, the district is developed a plan to reconfigure some buildings into "magnet" or theme schools. The hope was to induce the parents in overcrowded elementary attendance areas to voluntarily choose to send their children to one of the magnet schools. Since the magnet schools tend to have a higher percentage of minority students and the overcrowded schools a lower percentage of minority students than the district average, the magnet schools would serve to distribute elementary enrollment more efficiently across the eleven school buildings and reduce racial imbalance.

The first intradistrict magnet school, International School at Dundee, opened in September 2000, and was followed by Hamilton Avenue School in 2002 and Julian Curtiss School in 2003. The Dundee magnet was successful in attracting an enrollment that reflects the overall diversity of the school system. The growth of the minority population at Julian Curtiss School has stabilized since the magnet opened and is now just below the threshold for "impending racial imbalance." The magnet program has been less successful at Hamilton Avenue School due to facilities issues. Hamilton Avenue is temporarily located in a modular building during renovations. The educational specifications for the renovated school scheduled to open during the 2008-2009 school year stipulate that Hamilton Avenue will be built to a capacity sufficient to address racial imbalance through the magnet program. A fourth magnet school is scheduled to open at New Lebanon School in the fall of 2009.

EQUITABLE ALLOCATION OF RESOURCES AMONG DISTRICT SCHOOLS

Below is the description submitted by this district of how it allocates resources to insure equity and address needs.

Staff and budget resources are allocated to schools on a per pupil basis using projected enrollments. Adjustments to this per pupil allocation are made based on student need and performance. Principals and program leaders then develop a spending plan based on the improvement priorities of their buildings or programs. Additional funds are available to schools with high need student populations through the Consolidated Grant. A fifteen-year capital plan, which is reviewed and adjusted annually, ensures the maintenance of district facilities.

Accommodations for a student’s disability may be made to allow him or her to participate in testing. Students whose disabilities prevent them from taking the test even with accommodations are assessed by means of a list of skills aligned to the same content and grade level standards as the CMT and CAPT.

Federal law requires that students with disabilities be educated with their non-disabled peers as much as is appropriate. Placement in separate educational facilities tends to reduce the chances of students with disabilities interacting with non-disabled peers, and of receiving the same education.

SCHOOL DISTRICT IMPROVEMENT PLANS AND ACTIVITIES

The following narrative was submitted by this district.

The vision of the Greenwich Public Schools is to set the standard for excellence in public education. The mission of the Greenwich Public Schools is to educate all students to their highest level of academic potential and to teach them the skills and knowledge to become capable, creative and responsible members of society. The Greenwich Board of Education sets strategic directions and specific indicators of success as a means of measuring progress toward achieving this vision and mission and providing focus for improvement efforts.

The Connecticut Mastery Test and the Connecticut Academic Performance Test are state-mandated measures of core academic skills. After increasing steadily during the 1990's, the percentage of students performing at or above the goal in reading, writing and mathematics on the CMT in grades three through eight has remained relatively unchanged over the last three years. Tenth grade CAPT scores have moved up and down within a range over the last five years. In response to this "leveling off" of improvement in scores and continuing disparities in performance among disaggregated subgroups of students, the district adopted a strategic direction of accelerating achievement for all students and closing gaps in achievement among subgroups of students. Key initiatives to improve student achievement during the 2007-2008 school year included refining the implementation of mathematics and literacy programs in grades K -8, redesigning the curriculum review cycle, and expanding supplemental programs for students performing below grade level standards.

A second district strategic direction focuses on improving professional practice through leadership development, high quality supervision of classroom instruction, alignment of assessment to instruction, and better use of data to drive decisions. Leadership training focused on instructional best practice, increasing the time administrators spend in the classroom working with teachers, and using data to set meaningful goals for school and program improvement. The teacher evaluation plan was reviewed and rewritten by a cross role group of teachers and administrators to better define research-based standards for classroom instruction. The revised plan was piloted during the 2007-2008 school year with professional development for both teachers and administrators scheduled for 2008-2009. The standardized testing program was broadened to include assessments of technology literacy in fifth, eighth and eleventh grade. The development of interim assessments was initiated in reading at the elementary level to provide teachers with data necessary to improve instruction during the course of the school year. The elementary report card was better aligned to district curriculum standards revised to more effectively communicate student progress to parents.

A third district strategic direction seeks to align teachers, administrators, parents, staff, and members of the community in support of improving teaching and learning by clarifying roles and responsibilities, identifying common goals, and effectively communicating a vision for the future. The Greenwich Board of Education, with support from the district and school administration, is implementing a revised governance system. Board policies have been significantly streamlined clarifying roles, responsibilities and outcomes. The district mission statement was reviewed by various stakeholder groups during the 2007-2008 school year with revisions to be adopted in the fall of 2008. A district-wide approach to measuring success on key performance measures has been implemented allowing the Board and the public to monitor progress toward the fulfillment of the district mission and vision. Finally, a biannual survey administered to students, parents, teachers and community members is used to assess the satisfaction of key stakeholders with the services provided by the public school system.
